learner's development and the learners can lack in communication in English language.

In summary, every teaching situation or context has strengths and weaknesses, but the article stated above contributes to learner speaking skill more positively in EFL setting in my situation, because as I mentioned above the speaking is one of the deficiencies in my country, so that I think teachers with EFL background should teach in more modern way than traditional, such as teaching communicative, negotiated and learner-centred syllabuses rather than grammatical syllabus.

INCORPORATING HUMOUR IN TEACHING ENGLISH AS AN INNOVATIVE METHOD: AT WHICH LEVEL OF LANGUAGE COMMAND IT IS SUGGESTED TO USE HUMOUR IN CLASS

Kholmatov A.

Lecturer at Westminster International University in Tashkent

It has been not so long since in science the researchers started investigating the phenomenon of integrating humour into the foreign language classes. The first studies appeared in 1970s of the previous century. Since the 1970s, humour was studied as a pedagogical tool and as content material in foreign language teaching by scientists such as Monnot and Kite (Pun and games: paronomasia in the ESL classroom, 1974), Gomes de Matos (Humo(u)r, A neglected feature in foreign language, 1974), Trachtenberg (Joke telling as a tool in ESL, 1979), James Neuliep, Marc Deneire (Humor and foreign language teaching, 1995), John Schmitz (Humor as a pedagogical tool in foreign language and translation courses, 2002), Klaus Vorderwülbecke (Humor, Sprache und Fremdsprachenunterricht, 2005), Natascha Backhaus (Humor und Fremdsprachen lehren und lernen, 2005), Bettina Raaf (Humor im Englisch Unterricht, 2005), Nancy Bell (Learning about and through humor in the second language classroom, 2009) as well as by Eduardo Urios-Aparisi and Manuela Wagner (The use of humor in the foreign language classroom: Funny and effective, 2011) and by many more researchers. In Uzbekistan the theory of implementing humour in teaching foreign languages is an underexploited topic. However, there were some related doctoral studies about humour done by Yuldoshev in 2017 and Knyazin in 2016.

To continue, it would be better to define the notion of humour. However, the researchers do not have one unified definition of humour, because it a complex phenomenon and it is the subject of research in multiple disciplines. Cambridge online dictionary defines humour as follows: "the ability to find things funny, the way in which people see that some things are funny, or the quality of being funny" [1]. As it may be concluded from the definition, humour is an ability to see some things funny. Avner Ziv a reputable researcher in the sphere of Humour studies accepts humour as a form of communication and gives the following definition: "Humour is a form of communication with an intent to amuse, including special cognitive and emotional characteristics, that cause a physiological reaction" [2, 9]. The usual 'physiological reaction' mentioned in the definition, which is caused by humour, is a piece of laughter. This definition of Ziv is taken as basis for this paper. According to Dieter integration of humour elements in class can positively affect the learning environment and eventually, increase the "the amount of "what" is taught that is actually learned by students" [3, 22]. Hence, incorporating humour may favorably affect the learning process and its environment. However, an interesting question to answer is from which level of language command of learners humour can be incorporated into the lesson to reach the wished positive effect. The views of the researchers about this question are somehow dispersed. Schmitz claims that using humour as a teaching technique should start at the beginning of language learning process and it can be continued systematically through the entire language acquisition period. He explains his point by the fact that students should be exposed to the authentic language input "to different styles of speech and to speakers of different ages, sex, socio-cultural level and from different regions, the less artificial or "classroom-like" their output will be" [4, 96]. In one way with the popularity of the approach of using authentic materials in foreign language teaching and its positive effects, the opinion of Schmitz has a solid ground. This is because humour is an inseparable part of the cultural competence and it would be better to expose the students to the authentic humorous elements of the target language from the beginning of the course which sometimes lacks in the curriculum or syllabus of a particular course. Based on Schmitz's idea the teacher while choosing the humorous element to implement in the class should consider the authenticity of the content (e.g. joke or pun) by the fact that the native speakers themselves regard the content of the humorous element as humorous [4, 95]. Nevertheless, Schmitz's assertion is in strong opposition to the principles of Deniere. Deneire agrees that humour conveys cultural information which is a significant element of learning the target language; however, he assumes that in order to understand humour, a student will have to have necessary language competence. Thus, he suggests never to use humour as a technique to acquire "new linguistic and world knowledge, but rather as an illustration and reinforcement of acquired (if not assimilated) knowledge" [5, 294]. The reason for that is learners may not have enough language skills as stated above to fully understand the humorous element used. As a result, the humorous "punch line" can be lost and consequently the goal of why the teacher wanted to use humour in the classroom will be gone in vain. Taking this into account, in order to avoid the problem of understanding of the humour element, Schmitz suggests a solution that pieces of humour (e.g. telling a joke in the target language or practicing grammar with texts of jokes) should be chosen adaptively to the level of language command of the students, thereby, reaching the comprehension of the 'punch line' and the teaching goal [4]. Furthermore, Schmitz, based on Long and Graesser, divides humorous discourse into three types: "universal or reality-based joke", "culture-based joke", and "linguistic or word-based joke" [4, 93]. As universal joke (life-related humour) he describes the type of humour elements that do not depend on the linguistic or culture-related factors and that can be easily understood by all people, for example, the jokes that are well understood in any other languages and laughed at when one translates them. The culture-based jokes relates to the cultural aspects of the particular countries, such as regional jokes, jokes related to stereotypes and etc. According to Schmitz, the last type of humour element is linguistic or word-based joke (wordplay or a pun), which is linguistically oriented, namely, humour on the level of the lexical, phonological or morphological properties of a language [4]. Based on Schmitz, one could get started at the beginner level with the use of universal type of humour elements [4]. With the intermediate level learners, he suggests using universal humour elements and culture-based jokes. Since the third type, i.e. linguistic or word-based humour is regarded as a more complex type of humour, Schmitz relates the use of this type of humour to the level of the advanced learners [4]. Notably, one can practice universal and culture-based humour elements with the advanced students respectively. Bell criticizes Schmitz's assumption that one should practice a certain type of humour with the learners of a certain level. She underlines that the linguistic type of humour elements are very rare in the classroom and are difficult for language learners: „Of the three case study participants in my research, only one, the most highly proficient, employed wordplay, and of the 106 instances in which she initiated humor, only one of these was wordplay, suggesting that indeed this form of humor is difficult for language learners“ [6, 244]. In the opposite, Davies shares the vision that wordplay (a pun) can also be used by learners at low levels of language learning. She claims that scaffolding the wordplay to the students and letting them communicate and understand the pragmatics themselves can be useful to comprehend the linguistic type of humour elements [7].

In conclusion, it should be pointed out that employing humour during the class may bring positive effects. If used correctly, it may increase the amount of what is learnt by the students and create a pleasing learning atmosphere. Besides, humour is a substantial element of any culture. Thus, using authentic humorous materials from the target language culture will enable students acquire intercultural skills which is of high importance for constructive communication. Scientists' opinions differ when they write about from which level of foreign language learning can humour be implemented. However, it may be synthesized from their thoughts that humour can be used from the beginner's level provided that the teacher uses scaffolding and chooses the type of humour elements which may be understood in the current level of students. Furthermore, using universal type of humour elements can be understood already in the beginner's level and as level progresses more complex types of humour elements such as cultural and linguistic or wordplay based humour can be employed.

УНИВЕРСИТЕТЛАРДА ФРАНЦУЗ ТИЛИНИ ЎҚИТИШДА ИННОВАЦИОН ТЕХНОЛОГИЯЛАРДАН ФОЙДАЛАНИШ

Юнусова С.А.
ЎзДЖТУ ўқитувчиси

Мамлакатимиз мустақилликка эришгандан сўнг, чет тилларини ўргатишга қизиқиш ошди ва ёшлар учун кўплаб имкониятлар яратиб берилди. Ҳозирги пайтда хорижий тилларни ўргатишга юртимизда катта аҳамият берилмоқда. Мухтарам президентимизнинг ўз мурожатномаларида олий таълимга алоҳида урғу бериб ўтишлари ва профессор-ўқитувчиларни давлат гранти ҳисобидан хорижга малака оширишга юборилишларини айтиб ўтганликлари бунинг яна бир ёрқин мисолидир. Бу ҳам албатта, бежиз эмас. Бугунги кунда университетларда интерфаол ўйинлар орқали дарс ўтиш анъанага айланиб бормоқда.

Маълумки, дарснинг турли хил ўйинлар асосида ўтилиши талабаларнинг имкониятларини намоиш этиш, диққатни жамлаб, билим ва кўникмаларини ошириш ва кучли бўлишларини таъминлайди. Ўйин технологиясидан фойдаланишнинг асосини талабани фаоллаштирувчи ва жадаллаштирувчи фаолият ташкил этади.

Психологларнинг таъкидлашларича, ўйинли фаолиятнинг психологик механизмлари шахснинг ўзини намоён қилиш, ҳаётда барқарор ўрнини топиш, ўзини ўзи бошқариш, ўз имкониятларини амалга оширишнинг фундаментал эҳтиёжларига таянади.

Ҳар қандай иш замирида умумий қабул қилинган таълим принциплари, тактикаси ётиши керак. Ўқув ўйинларига ўқув предметлари асосқилиб олиниши керак. Ўйинлар жараёнида талаба оддий дарсга қараганда бу махсулотга қизиқиброқ ёндашади ва бемалол фаолият кўрсатади.

Таъкидлаш лозимки, ўйин энг авалло, ўқитишнинг бир усулидир. Талабалар ўйинли дарсларга қизиқиб қатнашадилар, ғалаба қозонишга интиладилар, ўқитувчи улар орқали талабага таълим-тарбия ҳам беради. Талаба французча ўйин ўйнаб, гапира оларканман, тинглаб тушуна оларканман, ёза оларканман, деб ишонади, қизикади.

Тажриба шундан далолат берадики, ҳар қандай ўйинда иштирокчиларнинг малакаси ва ёшидан қатъий назар, улар ўнғайсиз ҳолатга тушиб қоладилар. Шунинг учун ўйинни ўқув амалиётига тадбиқ қилишдан аввал қуйидаги педагогик-психологик масалалар ҳал этилиши зарур. Ҳар бир талаба ўйинга тайёргарлик кўраётганда қуйидагиларни билиши лозим:

Ўйиннинг мақсадини;
Ўйиннинг вазифасини;
Ўйиннинг режадаги қайси мавзуга тааллуқлилигини.
